An Antebellum Ozark Community and the Civil War: The Archeology of the Second Mount Comfort Church (3WA880), Washington County, Arkansas (1840–ca. 1865)

by Jerry E. Hilliard

The symmetrical plan of a small brick church built in the early 1840s by Cumberland Presbyterian settlers who formed the community of Mount Comfort, Arkansas, was later altered when Miss Ann James had a small wood-framed room added to the north side as a “music room” for her Mount Comfort Female Seminary.

Archeological excavations over three brief field seasons, 1991–1993, revealed the brick church’s foundation. Over 8000 artifacts, plus archival research, document the building’s use as a church, a school, and a community center, and as a military camp and hospital during the Civil War. At least part of the building was destroyed by fire, with evidence of extensive salvage of brick and other reusable materials.

Two Historic Cemeteries in Crawford County, Arkansas

edited by Robert C. Mainfort, Jr. and James M. Davidson

This monograph sets new standards of reporting for historic cemeteries. The authors present detailed descriptions of burials, mortuary hardware, and personal items from two late nineteenth century cemeteries—Becky Wright and Eddy—excavated in 2001 prior to inundation by expansion of Lake Fort Smith in Crawford County, Arkansas. Variability within and between the two cemeteries is explored from a socioeconomic perspective. The cost of each individual burial is calculated, revealing a number of striking contrasts between the two cemeteries. Results of geophysical surveys and bioarchaeological analysis are integrated. This volume should prove of value to historical archeologists and all those concerned with historic cemetery preservation.

An Inquiry into the Locations and Characteristics of Jacob Bright’s Trading House and William Montgomery’s Tavern
by Patrick E. Martin

Pioneering and classic study of Arkansas Post — the earliest European settlement in the Lower Mississippi Valley. Combines historical background from documentary sources with the results of 1971 archeological excavations.

1978, 101 pp., 39 illus., ISBN 1-56349-022-6 $4.00 (Order RS11)

An Archeological Assessment of Historic Davidsonville, Arkansas
by Clyde C. Dollar

“The creation of the Arkansas Territory and its march to statehood began with the settlement of the community of Davidsonville” (p. 1). Clyde Dollar’s documentary research established the significance of the site and the survival of archeological evidence, and helped save it from inundation by a proposed artifical lake.

The Seat of Justice, 1815–1830: An Archeological Reconnaisance of Davidsonville, 1979
by Leslie Stewart-Abernathy

Presents the results of test excavations to determine the extent and significance of intact deposits at this Frontier-era town. “The archeological record of Davidsonville...provides an almost unmatched heritage of a time when the dramatic contrasts of the frontier were intact” (p. 48).

Ghost Boats on the Mississippi: Discovering Our Working Past edited by Leslie Stewart-Abernathy

Arkansas was the only state to mount full-scale salvage archeology of wooden boat wreckage exposed by record low water on the Mississippi River in the 1988 drought. Packed with details of steamboat and model barge construction, accounts of late 19th and early 20th century wrecks in the Memphis area, and the changing role of river transport near the end of the steam era. Profusely illustrated. Suitable for archeologists and anyone interested in river history, especially steamboat buffs.

Paths of our Children: Historic Indians of Arkansas
by George Sabo III

A revised edition of Sabo’s introduction to the cultures and experiences of Arkansas Indian tribes from prehistory to the present. The Quapaws, Caddos, Tunicas, Koroas, and Osages, joined by Cherokees and others in the 18th century, all suffered removal to Indian Territory. Yet these Indians endured, adapted to their new environment, and found ways to keep their values and beliefs alive.

Crossroads of the Past: 12,000 Years of Indian Life in Arkansas
by Frank Schambach and Leslie Newell

Outlines the prehistory of Arkansas, from the arrival of a few families of adventurous hunters near the end of the Ice Age to that portentous day of June 18, 1541, when Hernando De Soto’s invading army crossed the Mississippi River near Memphis. This is a story of how the first Arkansas residents lived, worked and played: how they gathered, planted and cooked their food; hunted and fished; and built shelters, homes and towns.

Lab & Field Essentials

Standards for Data Collection from Human Skeletal Remains: Proceedings of a Seminar at The Field Museum of Natural History Organized by Jonathan Haas

Volume Editors: Jane E. Buikstra and Douglas H. Ubelaker
Assistant Editor: David Aftandilian

A spiral-bound laboratory manual providing up-to-date guidelines for basic data collection on human skeletal remains. Essential for the bioarcheology classroom or research laboratory.

There is much to recommend this volume. It has the tang of a workshop that worked. It is practical down to the design of record sheets. It can be knocked around in the lab or dropped in a puddle without fear of the cost of a replacement. And it is strictly necessary. Experts are brought together; they give their opinions on areas they know best; a protocol is drawn up for what minimal records to take if time is short, and what more to undertake if the opportunity arises.

A Handbook of Soil Description for Archeologists

by Gregory Vogel

This basic introduction serves as a guide to soil description for archeologists who have little background in soil science or geology, and also as a useful reference for those with more experience. Follows Natural Resource Conservation Service and U.S. Geological Survey guidelines. Lightweight, 9 x 6 inch format tucks into your backpack with ease. Excellent for field schools and handy for all archeological fieldwork.

CRM ON CRM: One Person’s Perspective on the Birth and Early Development of Cultural Resource Management
by Charles R. McGimsey III

Charles R. McGimsey offers his views on CRM, and no other single person is more suited to the task. This volume compiles McGimsey’s journals, papers, letters, articles, booklets, and book chapters spanning the 30 years that encompassed a revolution in the way archeology is done in America. A pioneer figure in public archeology and shepherd of the Moss-Bennett bill, McGimsey provides new annotations, abstracts, and section introductions plus a new essay on the future of CRM. Historians of archeology, those who teach CRM classes, and anyone concerned with archeological and other cultural resources will find CRM on CRM an essential account of this important era.

Historical Perspectives on Midsouth Archeology edited by Martha Ann Rolingson

The Midsouth region encompasses the Mississippi River alluvial valley from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to the mouth of the Red River, and adjacent uplands. Rolingson gathers together seven essays—including two of her own—addressing developments in archeological approaches to this unusual landscape from the 1830s to the 1990s. It is the history of American archeology from a regional perspective.

Ouachita Mountains

Forest Farmsteads: A Millennium of Human Occupation at Winding Stair in the Ouachita Mountains
edited by Ann M. Early

Excavations in Ouachita National Forest in 1995 explored historic and prehistoric structures at four sites in the Little Missouri River valley. At Blaylock Creek, the Epperson family weathered the Civil War. At Old Phillips Place, a domestic structure was converted to a blacksmith shop. Prehistoric structures at Bug Spot and Winding Stair span late Fourche Maline through mid-15th century Caddoan periods. Ethnobotanical studies and historic forest reconstruction reveal the creative use of narrow mountain valley terrain.

The Lower Mississippi Area

Coles Creek and Mississippi Period Foragers in the Felsenthal Region of the Lower Mississippi Valley
edited by Frank Schambach

The undisturbed, stratified Bangs Slough site, with occupations dating from A.D. 800 to 1700, produced no evidence of horticulture, despite the use of sophisticated collection techniques.

_It is an increasingly rare phenomenon in today's world of archeological publishing to witness not only a well written and highly commendable site report, but also to find one which makes a significant and in many ways groundbreaking contribution to the regional archeological literature._

The Shallow Lake Site and Its Place in Regional Prehistory in Southeast Arkansas
by Martha Ann Rolingson and Frank Schambach

Test excavations in Mound C recovered floral and faunal specimens, and bone, antler, shell, lithic, and ceramic artifacts. Schambach's ceramic typology for the Trans-Mississippi South is featured.

1981, 231 pp., 48 illus., ISBN 1-56349-036-6 $10.00 (Order RS12)

Powell Canal: Baytown Period Occupation on Bayou Macon in Southeast Arkansas
by John H. House

Well-preserved food remains, artifacts, and human burials represent a Baytown occupation dating to around A.D. 500. The faunal assemblage indicated a strong aquatic orientation, but there was no sign of maize agriculture.

Plum Bayou Culture

Toltec Mounds and Plum Bayou Culture: Mound D Excavations
by Martha A. Rolingson, with contributions by Gayle J. Fritz, Rob Hoffman, Teresa L. Hoffman, and Gina Powell

Toltec Mounds, the largest known Plum Bayou site, was in use over 300 years as the center of a simple chiefdom. The small resident population was able to mobilize people living in the surrounding countryside to build large earthworks. Mound D, fourth largest at the site, was built between A.D. 950 and 1030 in two stages, each with a structure on top. Quantities of food refuse and grog-tempered vessels suggest communal feasting. A few high-status artifacts reflect long-distance trade.

Emerging Patterns of Plum Bayou Culture
edited by Martha A. Rolingson

These papers present data and impressions from 1977–1979 fieldwork at Toltec Mounds. The Survey's major long-term research program was gaining steam and the site was under development as an archeological state park. Contains essays by Rolingson that defined Plum Bayou as a distinctive cultural expression in the Arkansas River lowland.

Pre-Caddoan Cultures in the Trans-Mississippi South: a Beginning Sequence

by Frank F. Schambach

After years of circulating in photocopies, this 1970 Harvard dissertation is now available intact in a new format and with an update by the author. This volume remains the definitive work on Archaic and Fourche Maline cultures in the Trans-Mississippi South, and demonstrates the enduring value of WPA-excavated collections. Schambach’s distinctive and lively style make this seminal research a delight to read.

Caddoan Saltmakers in the Ouachita Valley: the Hardman Site

by Ann M. Early

A Caddoan community occupied the Hardman site for 300 years just before the period of sustained contact with Europeans. They extracted salt from Saline Bayou using an evaporation process and practiced a mixed agricultural and gathering economy. Skeletal remains show evidence of a previously unknown disease possibly related to saltmaking.

Spradley Hollow Habitations: Four Rock Shelters and a Historic Homestead
by Kathleen H. Cande
Explores how Ozark rockshelters have been used from Early Archaic to modern times: as domestic encampments, storage areas, and other specialized uses, including a still. Chapters on faunal remains and paleoethnobotany at prehistoric and historic sites.

2000, 136 pp., 50 illus., ISBN 1-56349-089-7 $25.00 (Order RS56)

Contributions to Ozark Prehistory
edited by George Sabo III
Brings together the results of several projects marking a renaissance in Ozark area archeology. Organized in three parts devoted to rockshelter and open habitation sites, mound sites in northwest Arkansas, and paleoethnobotanical studies.

1986, 123 pp., 77 illus., ISBN 1-56349-054-4, $5.00 (Order RS27)

An Archaic Campsite in the Ozarks: Test Excavations at the Ryan Site
by Randall L. Guendling

The Archeology of Rock Art at The Narrows Rock Shelter, Crawford County, Arkansas
by Jerry E. Hilliard, with contributions by Gayle J. Fritz and Eben S. Cooper
The Narrows contained undisturbed midden rich in botanical and faunal remains, stone tools, and ceramics. 1995 excavations produced the first ever in situ association of artifacts connected to rock art production in Arkansas. Fritz performed ethnobotanical analysis. Cooper experimented with photogrammetry to record the petroglyphs.

Gone To A Better Land: a Biohistory of a Rural Black Cemetery in the Post-Reformation South
edited by Jerome C. Rose

A classic in the treatment of historic cemeteries. The Cedar Grove Baptist Church cemetery was relocated prior to revetment construction. Archeological and bioanthropological studies provide eloquent testimony of the hardships visited upon southwest Arkansas Blacks in the period following emancipation.

The findings ... complement, and ... go beyond what historians have ascertained about black life ... from written records.
— Willard Gatewood

There is no question that [the authors’] techniques and methods will become the benchmark by which other studies are measured.
— George J. Armelagos

Using field notes and burial cards from 1930s excavations, two recent reports explore the evidence for complex chiefdoms in northeast Arkansas —

Mortuary Behavior at Upper Nodena
by Rita Fisher-Carroll

Some social differentiation was seen in mound vs. non-mound burial at the Nodena phase type site, but no strong evidence for a multitiered political hierarchy.

2002, 112 pp., 20 illus., ISBN 1-56349-093-5 $12.00 (Order RS59)

A Mortuary Analysis of Vernon Paul Site
by Thomas Nelson Gannon

Minimal evidence of social ranking was found in the burial population at this Parkin phase site in Cross County, Arkansas.

Prehistoric Plies: A Structural and Comparative Analysis of Cordage, Netting, Basketry, and Fabric from Ozark Bluff Shelters

by Sandra Clements Scholtz

A classic study of rare plant fiber artifacts from the dry rockshelters of northwest Arkansas. Scholtz provides a detailed classificatory description of “interworked structures” excavated in the 1930s and curated by the University of Arkansas Museum. This significant and timeless archeological report has proved a favorite with museum and textile specialists, as well as fiber artists, basketmakers and weavers. Our digital reprint provides high quality graphic reproduction and updated fonts at an affordable price.

Nodena: an Account of 90 Years of Archeological Investigation in Southeast Mississippi County, Arkansas

edited by Dan F. Morse

This new (2007) digital reprint of the revised 1989 edition includes all of the original graphics in high-resolution formats that provide much-improved visual quality, and updated fonts for a pleasing appearance and easy readability. Minor errors to the text have been corrected, but otherwise, this is the same classic study of all extant skeletal material, with Morse’s 1989 summary of the Nodena phase. We are pleased to offer this reprint at the same great price.

Mounds

Mounds, Embankments, and Ceremonialism in the Midsouth

edited by Robert C. Mainfort and Richard Walling

Aboriginal earthworks of eastern North America have fascinated scholars and the general public for hundreds of years. This volume brings together studies of Poverty Point, Brogan, Crenshaw, Obion, Wickliffe, Chucalissa, and other Midsouth region mound sites, with emphasis on interpreting how these structures functioned within prehistoric social and ideological systems.

Surveyors of the Ancient Mississippi Valley

by P. Clay Sherrod and Martha Ann Rolingson

Surveys at 26 sites in the LMV and five sites in the Caddoan area show that ceremonial mound arrangements were planned in part on the basis of celestial orientation and standardized units of measure. A landmark study addressing prehistoric engineering and cosmology in the eastern United States.

The reconstruction of the intellectual life of an extinct society is so important and yet so difficult that any considered and well-reasoned attempt of the task deserves the warmest applause. Surveyors clearly falls into this meritorious category.

— Malcolm Webb, American Antiquity
